3. Reading. Ex.2 p.143

2 a) Listen and read to the end of the dialogue.

Linda: There's nothing artificial about U2. There were a hundred thousand people at the stadium. And a giant stage. And giant loudspeakers.

John: Yes, I heard the music all right. I had to close the windows but those 'ka-booms' went through the walls all the same.

Linda: So you heard it after all? All those messages of love and peace ...

John: Come on. Chopin's music is about love and peace. And Mozart's. It has survived for centuries. It's romantic and soft like love itself.

Linda: Hello! That's the taste of a hundred years ago or so. You have to wake up! You should ... er ... no, you must listen to what all the young people are listening to today.

John: Should? Must? Come on! There are no 'shoulds' or 'shouldn'ts' or 'musts' and 'mustn'ts' in music. You know that as well as I do. Music is a matter of taste, it's your personal choice, like the friends you choose, beliefs, attitudes, colours and whatever ...

Linda: Oops! I got carried away. I haven't been myself since I heard U2 live. Right. There's no point in arguing about matters of taste, of course! Sorry, mate.
